Personal and political ...

- Private challenge of being a father (individual responsibility):
 - “Am I doing it right?”
 - Changing standards, questions about role models
 - Many kinds of fathers (Traditional, dual earner, Married/cohabitating, Separated, divorced, step – living apart/together, young fathers, gay fathers, immigrant fathers ...)
 - Relative isolation from other fathers
 - Working it out with partners

Personal and political ...

- Public issues of fathering (structural conditions):
 - Isolation – how have our traditions limited support?
 - Invisible in delivery of some parenting services
 - Public images of fathers: incompetent; absent or irresponsible
 - Workplace practices or policies:
 - focus on performance
 - Conditional support; passive opposition
 - Public policies

Community-University Research Alliances (CURA)

Objectives:

- Accountability to the public
- Connect with “end users” of knowledge and expertise
- Support alliances and ongoing collaboration in order to:
 - foster innovative research
 - training of students, professionals
 - Enhancement of community resources
 - advancement of knowledge in areas of importance for the development of communities

History of FIRA partnership

- Small working group (2000)
- Scan of research/programs in Canada (Health Canada)
- National roundtable on fathering issues (March 2002)
- National Steering Committee, vision, objectives
- LOI to CURA program (Fall, 2002)
- Development of full proposal (2003)
- Funded start January 2004

FIRA Objectives

- to establish a sustainable Canadian network of people interested in enhancing father involvement
- to generate a baseline of Canadian knowledge and research on father involvement
- to inform public decision making, community development, and policy development
- to develop tools, resources and training to be used in practice
